New course

 SS####Z Power and Protest

Grades 10-12

2.5 Credit

The course will examine the history of protest in the United States while examining specific case studies and their impact on society. We will look at the ideological, political, and economic origins of the protest and their contributions to the larger social movements. We will also explore the rhetoric and tactics employed by the movements and the responses to the movements by the general public and government. Some case studies we will consider include: the Seneca Falls Convention, the Montgomery Bus Boycott, the Stonewall Inn riots, Occupation of Alcatraz, the Million Man March, Occupy Wall Street, March for Our Lives, Dakota Pipeline protest, and Black Lives Matter.

 Students have the option of earning Honors Credit through more challenging research and project work.*
